

Glad to see the FCC getting tough on faxes... I receive dozens a week. Not just the ink (at $26/cartridge) but the paper, the wear and tear on a very expensive piece of mechanical equipment, use of electricity, tying up of phone lines, not being able to use my own machine to fax out because someone is stealing from me without my permission.

I would support getting even tougher with it. Someone actually going after the culprits, getting them fined or put out of business.

As far as the existing business arrangement goes.. I have no problem allowing other businesses I want info from being allowed to provide it after I have given them written, signed permission.... and we will get it from those customers/clients it is necessary to get it from. Like any apparent change, some do not like, but it will eventually benefit all. Thank You, Thank You, long overdue.
